

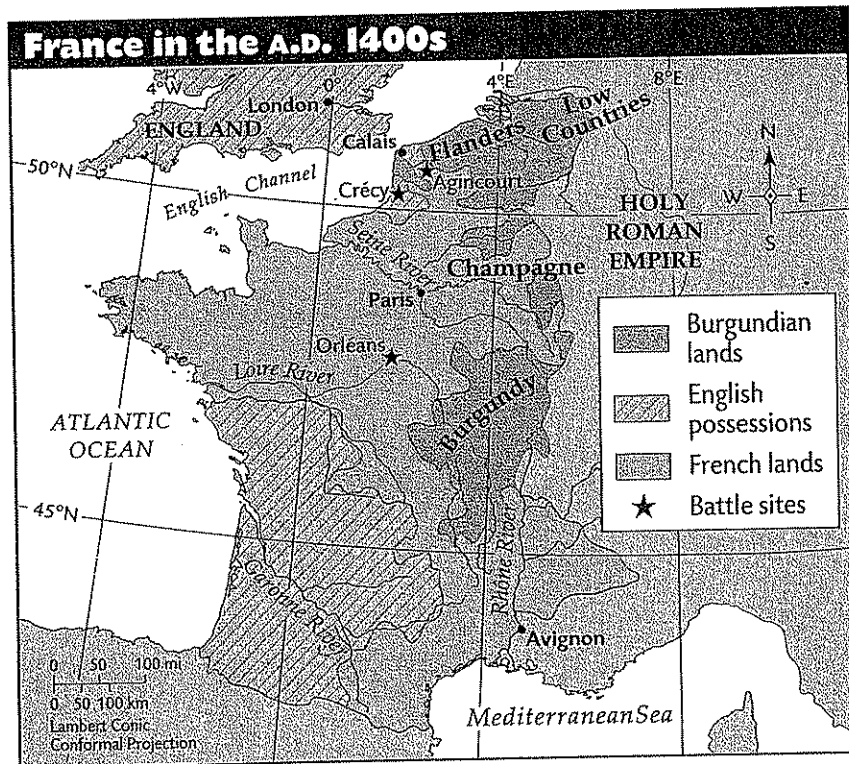

MAPPING HISTORY 13

Activity

France in A.D. 1400s

The Hundred Years' War between France and England lasted for 116 years. During this time, England had the advantage for the first 92 years, until the time of Joan of Arc. Having inspired the troops, Joan of Arc began driving the English back to the north of France. When the war ended in A.D. 1453, her efforts had helped push the English back to the port of Calais. The map below shows France in the A.D. 1400s. Use it to complete the activities that follow.

- Which areas of France were occupied by English forces?

- Which areas of France were occupied by French forces?

- Name three cities that were strategic battle sites in the Hundred Years' War.

- Under Joan of Arc's leadership, the French battled from Orléans to Reims. Reims is approximately 80 miles (120 kilometers) northeast of Paris. Mark Reims on the map. Gradually, the French made their way to Calais. Trace the French forces' route from Orléans to Calais.
